FUN AT FORT RILEY.

The Masonic Excursionists Entertained by Gen. Forsyth.

A Day of Enloyment Seldem Equalled Spent by the Royal Arch Musons-In Topeka Again Today.

SOLDIERS GIVE DISPLAY DRILLS.

The trip the Masons took to Fort Riley and Junction City yesterday was thoroughly enjoyable.

The excursion was a complimentary one to the general grand chapter, and was given by the grand chapter of Kanthe train from Topeks, and the number tions. There were also two other excursions to the fort that day, all in honor of the Topeka one. The M. K. & T. ran one of thirteen coaches from Parsons and Emporia and brought 1,100 people. The Union Pacific also brought in a good train load from the west. With those from Junction City Gent's Fancy Lawn Bows; west, with those from Junction City ed at least 4,000, The train reached the fort soon after deavored to scrape and rub some of the dust of the journey out of its eyes and pick the sand burs out of its clothes, the people crowded into the double decks of the porches on the east and west sides of the barracks that face the parade ground and ate their lunch, after which the exercises of the day began. General Forsyth left nothing unsors. These will launder, done for the entertainment of his visitors. It was after eleven o'clock before Chicago on detached service detructed to some extent from the orginally proposed entertainment of the day.

At eleven thirty, a skirmish line was sent across the parade ground to the north and the guests saw some fieldwork. It was running fire and as the line moved forward only to drop to the ground and fire again many a brave soldier bit the grass, or fell with imaginary holes in vulnerable portions of his person. This was where the hospital corps got in its work. There were about twenty of them dages and plasters, and one by one the wounded were taken care of and con-veyed to the ambulance, or taken out on a drag, the motive power of which was that most celebrated of military accessories, the army mule.

The wounded were taken into the crowd and the bandages examined by the spectators to see that they were all right. As soon as the dead men were relieved from duty they were allowed to walk away.

The handsomest part of the military programme was the mounted dress parade by the four troops of the Seventh cavalry on the parade ground. The eight buglers were thoroughly in touch with their instruments and were highly complimented by those who had heard bugling before. After the field maneuvers the troops were put through their sabre drills.

Troop A then gave an exhibition drill and this was followed by the riding drill by Troop E in the riding hall at 1 o'clock. This was splendid and consisted of hurdling and revolver and sabre practice on dummies.

It was now time for luncheon and the grand chapter and its invited guests were ushered to the immense mess hall, where rows and rows of tables greeted them. Guests to the number of 380 were seated at the tables and treated to a spread that was certainly splendid. Following is the menu:

Cold Silced Westphalia Ham.

During the entire luncheon the Fort Riley orchestra contributed some of its best selections to the merriment of the occasion. At intervals during the responses to the toasts Topeka's Modocs sang. Without them, the day would have been dull, indeed. The song that attracted the most admiration was one written specially for the occasion, entitled, "Riley, up so high." The toast programme was found to be rather cumbersome, as it called for eighteen responses. A good many of hem had to be cut out in consequence. Owen A. Bassett was toastmaster.

The first tosst was "The East," and was responded to by Hon. John W. Carter, of Connecticut. "The South" was most ably responded Officer Wiley Finds a Tramp He Used to Make Mud Pies With.

Deputy Marshal Wiley, who guards the Santa Fe yards at night, met a hobo this week who proved to be one of his old playmates. Wiley encountered the man in the yards, where tramps are not supposed to venture. It was the chilliest night of the week and the man did not have enough clothes on to make him reasonably warm.

"Come along with me," said Wiley.
"I don't want to be locked up."

"I won't lock you up."
Thus assured the tramp followed Wiley. On the way he told a pitiful story about not having had anything fit to eat for two days. He said also that he lived in Indiana and had been in Colorado. He had started with enough money to pay his railroad fare, but he preferred to save it until he got pretty near home, and then take a bath, shave, hair-cut, and buy a new suit of clothes and fix up generally. Tramps had robbed him of every cent the second day out, and now he had given up the hope of a shave and other improvements and was satisfied to money. Wiley took him over to a cheap restaurant where the man ate 60 cents' worth. Baked beans, coffee and sandwiches disappeared as though by magic. When the man had satisfied his hunger he felt more sociable and talked freely about his old home. He lived on a farm near Terre Haute. So had Wiley. He questioned him about a number of the well known families there and then said:

"Do you remember a family there named Wiley?" "Yes, I do; and, by George, you're John Wiley."
